The FROG AND THE OX. ✓

Scene opens with the King Frog seated on a log. His people and court attendants are about him. He orders his men to go forth and gather bugs that he may wax fat.

There are several scenes showing his hunters chasing bees. One of the hunters chases a bee over the back of an ox and about the ox's head. This annoys the ox and he chases the hunter. The hunter returns to the king exhausted. He tells the king that a terrible monster has chased him. The king swells up and asks the hunter if this terrible monster was as large as he. To which the hunter replies: "Yes, your majesty, much larger." The king swells up still larger. He then asks the hunter if this monster was as large as he is now. The hunter answers: "Oh, yes, your majesty, much larger." The king swells himself still more and at last, bursts.

Moral:

CONCIT BEGETS DISASTER.

Modern Adaptation: Scene of a landlord who is so conceited, that he bursts himself from his own importance.
